Taking time off of school is a bad idea for a lot of reasons. Students should choose to not take time away from school because it will get them off task and detour them from what their main career goals are. The students will not want to go back to the way things used to be after they have had a break from it. They will also see that they can get their careers on a better path by starting sooner rather than later.

Many students consider taking time off from school to get a break from the hard studying and long homework hours. But if you were to really think about it you would not want to go back to that sort of environment after you have been taking a break from it. It would become harder than it would off been had you started right after the summer of high school. The reasons for that are you would start to enjoy the life of a part time working teenager and not have to worry about the things that are associated with school. Then you would start to dread the time when college is upon you and you have to change your life-style again. But if you are the kind of person who dreads school but you still want to get a college degree you know that it would be easier for you to start right after high school. For many reasons and many different kinds of people, starting college after high school is the thing to do.

Everyone has a dream of what there ideal career is and how they want to achieve that dream. To start out you want to get to work on that dream as soon as possible, and for most people their dream job has to do with some years in college. If you are one of these people, then taking a break from school is not the answer. You will delay the day when you can go into work doing the job you love, with the suit or uniform that has been in your dreams. But if you take a break, you might loose that dream. The job that you want might have slim employment opportunities, and you want to get there before that other guy does. If that does happen to you then you will have regrets and thoughts of what could've been if I had started school earlier.

There are so many different reasons to why you should start college after high school. You will not have to go through the change in your life again when you start over from relaxed life into study life. The opportunity to start your career is there. So there is just no reason I see is to why it is good to take a break.

Many people think that it is a good idea to take some time off school before going to college, but is this a good idea? Taking time off from school before school is a good idea. Many students find this time a good opportunity to work and earn money to go to college during this time is also good to relax before heading back to the stress of school. If students are planning to go out of state this time could be used get used to their new town.

First main reasons is that students take time off is to earn money for college and to relax before going back to school. Many students who aren't able to get scholarships take this time off firm school before college to be able to earn money. Some students take off one or two years to work hard to get enough money to be able to attend college. While only being two years students don't forget their study habits and self-discipline. During this time students also find it good to relax while only dealing with work. It is very stressful to be dealing with both school and work at the same time. Some students still continue to work while attending college, but it is less of stress knowing that college is paid. Other students have enough earn, but still take time to relax from all the stress of school.

Second reason is that some students go to colleges out of state. Taking some time off can be used to get used to the new town. Some students decide not to live in the school dorms and use the time off to settle themselves in the new town. While some students look for apartments to live in others use the time to get a secure job. Moving out of state means leaving your job, some students make sure that before going to college they have a secure job.

So is it a good idea to take time off before going to school? While some students find this as an opportunity to earn money for college, others find it as time to relax from all the stress of school. Other students also use this to time to get to know the towns were they are moving to and get secure jobs. So taking some time off from school can be a good idea.

Many high school students consider taking so time off from school before going to college. But me personally don't think that's a good idea. A lot of students make excuses like they need that time off to find them self's and to find out what want to do in life. To me all this is just a bunch of excuses to not move on into "adult hood".

One reason why I don't think it's a good idea to move in life. I mean when you heading to college is because you are never going to move in life. I mean when you finally decide that you want to work for a year and in that year to save money for future education, most people end up just working for years until they see how the real world is out there and they end up going back to school like five years later. This is a disadvantage because if you would have gone of to college right after high school, you would be set for sure by five years later. You could maybe have your own mortgage already and maybe even little kids running around in your house hold.

Another good reason why students should not take time off before heading of to college is because they end up in bad foot steps. What I mean by this is that teens think that just because they are out of high school and out working, they could just go party every night. Teens that are not involved in college seem to go out more and drink even thought college kids do get a little crazy at times. This is a high risk of teens turning into alcoholics or drugs abusers.

All in all, I think that these two reason say it all why you shouldn't take some time off before heading to college. I mean teens end up not doing anything in life but working in a job they don't even like or enjoy, and some end up abusing drugs or drinking alcohol as a daily habit.
